Pillar 9 of 11

Connection to Brahman

Brahma Sambandha

Category: Spirit · 10 min/day · 15 karma points

Beyond the body, beyond the mind, beyond personality — there is a field of universal consciousness. This pillar is the daily contact with it.

OVERVIEW

What is this practice?

Connection to Brahman (Brahma Sambandha) is the practice of regularly entering the elevated state of awareness where the boundary between the individual self and the universal field dissolves. The Upanishads call this Brahman — the infinite, unchanging reality that underlies all existence.

This is a practical philosophy for self-understanding, inner transformation, and spiritual evolution — not a religious doctrine. The practice has no religious affiliation and welcomes people of all backgrounds, beliefs, and traditions. What you call the source — God, Creator, Universal Consciousness, Source Energy, the Universe — is your language. The experience is universal.

The only requirement is openness to the idea that an intelligent universal energy flows through all things. From that openness, through guided meditation and subconscious-awareness techniques, the practitioner learns to connect to that energy, experience inner stillness and bliss, and develop a daily practice of presence.

SCIENCE + TRADITION

Why it works

Modern neuroscience has begun mapping what the Upanishads described: in deep meditation, brain wave states shift from beta (alert thinking) to alpha (relaxed awareness) to theta (subconscious access) to delta (deep stillness). The subconscious mind — which holds most stored memory and pattern — becomes available for healing and transformation in these states.

Mundaka Upanishad 2.2.4 gives the precise instruction: 'Om is the bow; the atman is the arrow; Brahman is said to be the mark. It is to be struck by an undistracted mind. Then the atman becomes one with Brahman, as the arrow with the target.' The technology is 3,000 years old; the experience is available today.

DAILY GUIDE

How to practice this today

1. Sit upright in a quiet place where you won't be interrupted.
2. Close the eyes, take 3 deep breaths, soften the body.
3. Repeat the syllable 'Om' silently or aloud — 7 times.
4. Drop into silence and observe what arises without engaging it.
5. When the mind wanders, gently return to 'Om' or to the breath.
6. Hold the silence for 10 minutes. Beginners: 5 minutes is enough.
7. Close with the wholeness mantra: 'Purnam adah, purnam idam' — That is whole, this is whole.

SCRIPTURE

What the tradition says

"Om is the bow; the atman is the arrow; Brahman is said to be the mark. It is to be struck by an undistracted mind. Then the atman becomes one with Brahman, as the arrow with the target."

— Mundaka Upanishad 2.2.4

"Aham Brahmasmi — I am Brahman. The individual consciousness is identical with the ultimate reality."

— Brihadaranyaka Upanishad 1.4.10

"Purnam adah, purnam idam, purnam udacyate, purnam eva vyate — That is whole, this is whole. From the whole, the whole has been projected. When the whole is taken from the whole, the whole alone remains."

— Isha Upanishad — Shanti Mantra

"Tat tvam asi — You are That. The individual self and the universal Self are one."

— Chandogya Upanishad 6.8.7

TROUBLESHOOTING

Common obstacles

I don't believe in any god — does this still apply?

Yes. Replace 'Brahman' with 'universal consciousness,' 'field,' or 'source.' The practice is empirical, not theological. Do it for 21 days; let your direct experience be the test.

Nothing happens when I meditate.

Then 'nothing happening' is the experience. Most people expect drama. The real shift is subtle and shows up off the cushion — in patience, in how you greet strangers, in what you eat.

I feel my mind expanding and it scares me.

Open the eyes, place hands on the floor, take 5 grounding breaths. The fear is the personality contracting at the moment of expansion. It passes. Be gentle — don't force the next session.

FOR YOUR DOSHA

A note on constitution

Many participants begin experiencing meaningful shifts and a deeper connection within the first week of sincere practice. Vata types: this pillar grounds your scattered awareness. Pitta types: it cools the constant 'doing' fire. Kapha types: it lifts you out of routine into possibility.
